I have requested that Sir Professor Mansel Aylward leads on developing the recommendations from the One Wales Occupational Health Task and Finish Group report into a detailed implementation plan. This work will modernise the current approach to occupational health in NHS Wales to improve its profile, making a career in this area more attractive.

I have no powers which relate directly to the testing of fire hydrants by fire and rescue authorities. It is the obligation of the relevant water undertaker to keep every fire-hydrant fixed on any of its water mains or other pipes in good working order, and to replace any hydrant when necessary. That obligation is contained in section 57 of the Water Industry Act 1991. In addition, with certain limitations, a water undertaker has a duty in respect of the constancy and pressure of flow of water to fire-hydrants (section 65). I can enforce these obligations on water undertakers under section 18 of the 1991 Act.
