*Derbyniwyd ateb i'w gyhoeddi ar 02 Gorffennaf 2013
Answer received for publication on 02 July 2013*

The Minister for Education and Skills (Huw Lewis): Local authorities subject to intervention/recovery should meet the costs of the recovery themselves. Authorities should set out how they will meet the costs of Recovery Boards without impacting on the delivery of education or other services. Recovery Boards will need to ensure that in their operation, no funding for frontline services is diverted to meet the costs associated with recovery.

However, taking into account the amount of time the Recovery Boards will operate, fees and travel and subsistence for board members, I estimate that the potential costs for the Recovery Board in Monmouthshire County Council will be in the region of £75,000 and in Merthyr Tydfil County Borough Council in the region of £100,000.

The total estimated cost of the Denbighshire Recovery Board over the two years of its operation was £80,000 to £100,000 (depending on how the indirect costs are accounted for). This comprises around £55,000 in fees, travel and subsistence for the Board members to attend meetings, with the remainder covering Welsh Government costs.

I refer to your question about the protocol for council officers and staff selected to join Recovery Boards. Serving council officers and staff who have been selected to participate in Recovery Boards have been selected on the basis of their knowledge skills and experience.

The skills they bring have been matched to the issues prevalent within the authority they will be assisting. The composition of the Boards is intended to ensure that they meet the needs of the authority in recovery. In determining the membership, the skills knowledge and experience of the individual Board members has been considered to ensure that the members of the Board compliment one another and create a strong Board while providing the expertise necessary to support the authority in question.

My officials have established common terms and conditions for Board members that set out the expectations of the role and the principals on which the Boards are founded. Each Board also has clear terms of reference for their work.

Regarding your question about the cost implications for local authorities if officers are selected to join Recovery Boards, as I have said, local authorities subject to intervention/recovery should meet the costs of the recovery themselves. This includes meeting the fees and travel and subsistence costs for Board members. Where a Board member is an officer of another local authority we would not expect fees to be paid; however reasonable travel and subsistence costs will be met by the local authority receiving the intervention.

For those local authorities whose officers are asked to participate by joining an independent Recovery Board this is subject to the agreement of the corporate body and its elected members. Individual protocols for securing this agreement may vary from authority to authority. All of the authorities so far approached have very generously and willingly released their staff to participate.

While I recognise and appreciate that authorities are giving their officers time to participate in the Recovery Boards, I would anticipate that these officers will develop as a result of their participation in the Boards and that their own authorities will see the benefits.

No badgers were required to be put down due to illness or injury. There were 13 instances where minor injuries were recorded.

The project cost around £943,000 to deliver, which is in keeping with the original estimates provided in March 2012.

The Sam system was introduced in 2011 and Defra have not yet published data for Wales prior to 2008 on the new Sam basis. The data for 2003-2007 have been taken from the AHVLA Annual Surveillance report and are based on the old IT system and are therefore not directly comparable to the Sam based data due to changes in definitions and other differences in the processing of the source data.

(b) Statistics on the number of herds under restriction due to a TB incident are not currently available for 2003-2007.
